Creating a new Photoshop document. You can create a new document and start working on a photo. When you first start Photoshop, it creates a three-layer blank document. (This is a single layer, but it has two groups of layers, as explained on on page.)

Basic commands. You can use most of Photoshop's basic tools. You can use the Select tool to select areas of a photo, and the Marquee tool to select a single or range of lines. (See Chapter 2 for more about how to work with images in Photoshop.) Also, you can use the Channels, Curves, Pen, and some other tools to adjust color and light in an image. (See Chapter 5 for tips on learning these tools.) You can use the Build panel to bring up menus; the History panel to view and restore your past work; and the Options bar to switch to various settings.

Adjusting images. You can use the History panel to edit your image with its Restore from History function, while you use the Adjustments panel to adjust the overall tone and colors of an image. (See Chapter 9 for more.) You can use the Adjustments panel's Levels tool to adjust the contrast of an image. The Shadows/Highlights tool can create new detail and highlight in a shadow, and the Blur/Sharpen tool can sharpen an image or blur it. You can use the Lens Correction tool to correct optical distortions and aberrations in an image. You can use the Liquify tool to distort the appearance of an image. (See Chapter 14 for more.) You can use the Stroke tool to add new borders around an image, select an object, or paint one. You can use the Quick Selection tool to isolate an object and move it around or copy and paste it.

Layers. Layers can be used to combine and edit multiple parts of an image or to separate an image into multiple layers. (See the upcoming section "Layers: The Revealing Truth About Images" for more about layers and their importance.) You can use the Marquee tool and the Selection tool to select parts of an image, and you can use the Eraser and the Smudge tools to soften or even erase parts of an image.

Q: How do I move a portion of a row based on a column in Pandas? I have a dataframe that looks like this

id	value	type
1	3	x
1	0	y
2	8	y
3	4	x

I want to move the value from type x to type y in the previous row based on the id in the current row. So the first row will look like this

id	value	type
1	3	x
1	0	y
2	8	y
3	4	x

What's the best way to do this? A: You can use DataFrame.combine_first:

```
df = df.combine_first(df.assign(type_x=np.where(df['type']=='x', 'y', 'x')).drop('type', 1))
```

print(df)

id	value	type
0	1	3
2	2	8
3	3	4

Immunocytochemical study of basic fibroblast growth factor and its receptor in the nervous system of human and rat. Using specific antisera raised against basic fibroblast growth factor (FGF), a polypeptide mitogen with a very high affinity for heparan sulfate proteoglycans, immunocytochemical studies were performed in the nervous system of human and rat. In the human nervous system, FGF immunoreactivity was detected in the floor plate in the embryo and more diffusely distributed throughout the human CNS at all developmental stages. The present study revealed that neurons (in the cortex, in the hippocampus and in the caudate nucleus) and more particularly glial cells (in the white and gray matter) in the adult human CNS exhibited intense FGF immunoreactivity. In addition, in the adult CNS FGF immunoreactivity was observed in endothelial cells of brain capillaries and of the choroid plexus as well as in the ependyma and choroid plexus epithelium. In the rat, intense FGF immunoreactivity was observed in the developing CNS (floor plate, rhombencephalon, hindbrain, spinal cord) as well as in the adult CNS (lateral ventricle, ependymal cell layer of the choroid plexus). In both species, FGF immunoreactivity was also detected on the surface of neurons and on dendrites. Because many molecular aspects of FGF-related growth control remain unknown, in situ hybridization and immunocytochemistry were combined with biochemical analysis of serum FGF levels in order to gain more information about the potential relationship between FGF synthesis and secretion and the anatomic distribution of FGF receptors. Results from in situ hybridization experiments showed that neurons and glial cells in the adult rat brain and spinal cord, and in the adult human brain and spinal cord contained mRNAs encoding FGF. These results suggest that heparan sulfate proteoglycans (either in the heparan sulfate side chain or complexed to FGF) are involved in the molecular mechanisms of FGF action in the CNS. In addition, the surface of neurons and glial cells in the rat and the human CNS was found to contain a high density of FGF receptors. Last weekend, the World Amateur Team Championship ended with triumph for USA (50 pts, +68). This result brings the number of points won by the country under the English-
