Under Night In-Birth is a hack and slash action game created by veteran Japanese game developer, CyberConnect2. It is an action-adventure game centered on in-game events driven by a story mode and a battle mode. Also, a single player mode is available to play alone in a non-linear story mode. Storymode: Under Night In-Birth is a story of a hero's life - an adventurous boy named Inaho. Inaho is a descendant of an Imperial Bloodline, and he made a pact with INNATE to become a savior of the world. However, due to the Innate's misdeeds, the Bloodline become a curse to the world and their shared promise is doomed to fail. Inaho and his allies have to try to reconcile with INNATE in order to save the world. [Story Mode Features] -BATTLE! - In order to save the world, Inaho and his allies take part in the YGGDRASIL Battle, in which they fight to save lives. For this, players are forced to get their hands dirty and enter an arena where they fight a challenging war alongside other users. The Battle ends only when their health gets depleted to 0 or they lose all of their lives. Battle system is designed so players must use their approach to the battlefield and allies to fight against other players. Fight alongside each other in a romantic battle in a virtual Rennen, utilize your allies' individual skills to equip them with a weapon you need, and then summon their mighty power by using a limited number of super combos to become invincible and score a kill. *Fully-customized Arms Dealer, Magi, and Battle by players. -Non-linear Free Play - For the first time, the traditional RPG elements have been replaced by the freedom of "Free Play." Players can freely explore the battlefield of YGGDRASIL and try anything out anytime they want. 'Free Play' allows players to freely travel around on the map and freely discover the storyline. However, the story won't advance if players disregard the game's rules and there are many monsters in the world. Explore everywhere and enjoy a new sense of freedom. -Battlefields / Bank System (3 maps) - Three maps and a huge bank that adds to the game's existing elements. --Adventure, School, and Business-- You can go to one of three maps: Adventure, School, or Business, which are

Bottle Flip is a booze fueled competitive VR drinking game, designed by indie dev Albright! This episode is the first of six in the series and it stars a new first mate: The Moth! Dive into the classic “choose your job” narrative choice system of Bottle Flip, but this time in VR! Requires Oculus Quest, Oculus Go, Gear VR or Google Cardboard compatible phone, headphones and PC with Oculus Home installed for multiplayer (game requires Oculus Go). For full support with technical issues, technical questions and network issues during a multiplayer game, please contact our support team to get as much help as you need before playing. Doesn't work on Gear VR. Doesn't work on Google Cardboard. Big news on the release front!! Today we are announcing the release of our first expansion - our debut episode "Elizabeth Margaret"! On top of introducing our newest first mate, Elizabeth Margaret, we are introducing a brand new crew! And, it's all because of a new tragic and exciting love story from Stockley! And to celebrate the new chapter of Bottle Flip we are offering a discount for the month of August! Gear VR Multiplayer was, until now, solely playable from Gear VR. With this update, the game can be played across different VR experiences! It is currently supported through the Vive / Vive Cosmos / Index Worlds Vive Pre and the Oculus Quest. The “Teleport” method can be used to connect different headsets. Simply teleport to a nearby headset and you are good to go! Any currently supported headset will work as long as they are within 1m of each other. The “Gearbox” method is best for situations where the headsets are separated by more than 1m. Gearbox is a bit of a bug (or, something to look into in the future) and as such it requires some manual work to get it to work. More details on the official forums: Feature Sets Role Masks Role Masks are a new way of creating your crew, there are now 3 sets of 4 masks to choose from that offers different styles and needs. The role masks have a gender choice. Female First Mate and

It is a timed, VR puzzle game where you must attempt to bottle flip up to 100 bottles in 100 seconds. Think of it like a combination of Minesweeper and Tetris. It's a VR game about physical and mental dexterity in the air. Tetris, only more so. That sounds good. I want to try this game right now! What is OmniVR: OmniVR is an evolution of the VR control mechanism that was originally introduced in The Not So Large Expedition. 5/5 GameSpot Disappointment There were some moments of bliss in the experience, but overall it's not so great. 1/5 Epic Clicker Credit: AP In this Wednesday, July 30, 2019 photo, a man walks past AT&T stores in Chicago. AT&T on Monday, Aug. 5, 2019, said it will pay $11.2 billion to buy Time Warner, a deal critics of the deal say will give it too much control over content distribution and stifle competition. (AP Photo/Nam Y. Huh) NEW YORK (AP) — Like an operator of a car in a casino, AT&T must get license from the U.S. government to provide phone service, according to a long-established rule with roots in the 1880s. But AT&T and the Justice Department on Monday defended the proposed $85 billion deal, saying it is a conditionally permitted transaction under the Communications Act. AT&T must go to the Justice Department to get an exemption from the law from the Federal Communications Commission, saying the massive deal would not threaten consumer protection or competition. The government currently gets an exemption to regulate the Internet, and the deal would regulate content on the country's second-biggest network, according to the AT&T lawyers. ADVERTISEMENT "This is the only way the company could ultimately provide national broadband," said Randall Rothenberg, head of telecom analysis at the nonpartisan telecommunications industry association T-Mobile. The deal, announced Monday, was likely to spur litigation from competitors and others who say it will give AT

: The History Of Mario Kart VR Edition Although limited in scope and platforms, the VR ecosystem is growing rapidly. In our first article about VR games, we focused on the current state of the VR industry and how that reality impacts game development. The real-life impact of VR is, at this time, still anecdotal—for now. However, with Samsung's Gear VR expected to be available on the floors of select retailers by late August, the handful of experiences available using Google Cardboard already prove that VR is capable of putting the user inside visually stunning, comprehensive games. Not only does that validation from real users create a market for developers to fulfill, it also opens the door for studios to continue innovating in a new medium that relies on first principles to create the best VR experience. That innovation ranges from traditional games to new forms of entertainment. Current VR titles allow a user to drive a car, operate a coffee machine, get a high score in an action game, work as a chef, or play a sport. But the proverbial "What could that experience be?" question can also be posed as a deeper concept: What is VR? If you think of the term "VR" as a place, an environment, it might help to take a look at what locations we've inhabited in VR entertainment so far. The first VR "location" was a movie theater. Using handheld, head-mounted technologies to simulate a user staring at a movie-screen or a television, the experience has proven to improve viewing habits and make people more likely to pay for not only regular movie theaters, but to see them more often in their homes. However, the user is essentially hooked to their phones the entire time, much like when they watch a movie at home. They aren't interacting with anything except a screen. The virtual "location" of VR then grew to include driving a car in a movie. With a phone in each hand, users can control a car racing, bombing, or selecting an ideal route to go. While varying degrees of user control help to make driving a more engaging experience, the controls and input lag make this a poor first experience to use for exercise. Then a new technology came along and the real world became a new "location" to inhabit. The Google Cardboard was launched in 2013. It was a simple method to experience VR through existing smartphones. Rather than placing the phone
